

Letter from Alexander Melville Bell to Alexander Graham Bell, April 7, 1872, with transcript

3 April 7, 72. My dear Aleck,

The "Globe" sent you is the only copy we have. I ordered a supply to be sent to Hudson's on the day the letter appeared, and as he said nothing of them on Saturday, I am afraid he has not got them. In that case they will not now be obtainable at all. I wrote another article embodying the letter for , the "Canadian Baptist"— this will probably appear in next issue, on Wednesday. I have heard from Mr. Lowell at Boston. The "Institute" Courses for next winter are already filled up. Nothing yet from Vince(?). This matter would have been arranged before now had it been left in Mr. Brooks' hands. Why didn't you write last week? You ought on Mama's account, to be regular even if you have nothing to say. She was not well towards the end of the week, and I suspect that not hearing from you was in some measure the cause. Do write!!

Your affectionate father, Alex. Melville Bell.
